Camille Munro walked off a plane at Regina International Airport wearing a crown, sash and huge grin.

Munro was returning from Vancouver, where she had just been crowned Miss World Canada — a title not worn in Saskatchewan since 1963.

"I'm really proud to bring (the crown) back to Saskatchewan. … I am really happy that it's here, and I can share it with the rest of Canada and maybe they will learn more about what we have to offer here," said Munro, who recently graduated from the University of Regina, where she studied human justice.

As the national pageant winner, the 22-year-old beauty queen will act as an ambassador of Canada and focus on humanitarian efforts — her full-time job for the next year.

She will also travel to Indonesia to compete in the Miss World pageant on Sept. 28, and will be there four weeks in advance to prepare.

"We will step up our game because instead of competing against 35 beautiful women in Canada, we will now be competing against 130 countries. This is huge," said her mother Sharon-Ann Brown, who manages her daughter's business affairs.

Munro, a dance instructor, was able to wow judges at the May 8 and 9 Canada competition, where she answered interview questions and showed off her dance talent. She also showed her style in a bathing suit, an evening gown and a traditional outfit, which reflected her Jamaican heritage.

Since joining the competition, her message has been on improving the lives of young women.

"There are some (local) charities that I work with and I wish to continue working with … but then globally there are a lot of organizations that you may not have otherwise been able to get involved with," said Munro.

"So it's important to remember that side of (the pageant) as well."

Two-day event

Housing summit kicks off in Regina

The long-promised Mayor's Housing Summit began Monday at Hotel Saskatchewan. The event brought Regina stakeholders and speakers from across Canada to discuss issues surrounding the housing market — especially low-income housing.

The two-day event was central to Mayor Michael Fougere's election campaign last fall.

"We have had a great kick off to the summit," said Fougere. "There was some very good discussion throughout the day and we expect to have another great one tomorrow."

Representatives of the provincial and federal governments addressed the crowd of some 230 people in the morning. Following that, speakers discussed everything from Vancouver's housing initiatives to First Nations perspectives on housing, and innovation in the residential market.

Speakers included Fougere, June Draude, minister responsible for Saskatchewan Housing Corp., Quebec Conservative MP Maxime Bernier and CBC business correspondent Amanda Lang, co-host of the television program The Lang and O'Leary Exchange.

"The hope is that this discussion we are having here can be used as part of a national conversation as well," Fougere said. "It is a very complex problem, and we're not going to solve it today. But I think we can dialogue together to make sure our programs work well."

Province's private liquor vendors 'being set up to fail'

Not happy. Critic says Saskatchewan's plan for private-sector alcohol sales doesn't add up for retailers

ROSS ROMANIUK
ross.romaniuk@metronews.ca

Rather than becoming thriving liquor vendors, Saskatchewan retailers poised to begin private alcohol sales are allegedly "being set up to fail."

That charge comes from a co-owner of several licensed establishments, who argues that the Saskatchewan Liquor and Gaming Authority (SLGA) is only looking after its own interests through its plan, with the government, to allow private-sector liquor stores in Regina and Saskatoon.

"They're saying one thing and doing another," Kevin Kasha said of the Crown agency's recent announcement on private liquor retailers, slated to begin sales within the next year.

"They're trying to regulate it so that their own retail stores are stronger."

Kasha, a part-owner of pubs in Regina, Saskatoon and Estevan, said the four stand-alone private operations will be operated "not really differently" than Saskatchewan's existing liquor vendors and off-sale outlets.

Instead of giving them a significant business advantage, he said, the provincial government's planned 16-per-cent discount for Sobeys, Co-op and Willow Park Wines and Spirits on SLGA products isn't enough to make the sales of private vendors a success.

"These ones are just getting a little bit more of a discount, but they're really no different operationally than what we've got already," Kasha explained, comparing the arrangement to a "bootlegging" operation.

"They're going to lose money at 16 per cent, if they price it the same way as the SLGA stores. And if they mark it up higher than that, the customer is going to say, 'These private guys are gouging us.'"

The SLGA-owned liquor store at Dewdney Avenue and Lewvan Drive in Regina is among the retail outlets poised to become stronger because of the Saskatchewan Liquor and Gaming Authority's plan with the province to allow private vendors, one critic says. JEFF MACKEY/METRO

SLGA spokesman David Morris, however, dismissed Kasha's criticism.

"It wouldn't be in our best interests and the province's best interests to set up a system where we invite companies to be our partners, only to set them up to fail," Morris said, noting that dozens of applicants had sought the province's approval for liquor stores.

"So I think it's safe to assume that businesses believe the discount is workable or adequate."

Omnibus labour law may hurt workers: Union

Labour Minister Don Morgan
METRO

The Saskatchewan government has passed a labour act melding 12 pieces of legislation into one omnibus law that allows for more flexible work hours, shortens the qualifying time for parental leave and ensures disabled people can't be paid less than minimum wage.

But the Saskatchewan Federation of Labour says it's rife with loose ends, waters down current labour standards and undermines bargaining rights.

The new Saskatchewan Employment Act allows for people to work either five eight-hour days a week or four 10-hour days a week, lowers the qualifying period for maternity, parental and adoption leave to 13 weeks from 20 weeks and says people with disabilities can't be paid a lower minimum wage.

"The significant thing for people that are working is the consolidation of all the pieces of legislation into one," said Labour Minister Don Morgan.

"The thing that I'd say to workers right now is let's put the rhetoric down and let's work on the regulations and get people to have an understanding of what's there."

The new act will also have regulations to index the minimum wage — meaning it will be adjusted to the cost of living.

Federation president Larry Hubich said the government "plowed ahead with this flawed legislation."

"There's hundreds of problems with the legislation," said Hubich.

For example, Hubich said it's good that the government has narrowed the definition of a supervisor.

But he said the government has also removed a provision that allowed unions and employers to agree on the scope of jobs.

Amazing Race Canada contestants hit Queen City

Filming around town.
Riders fans among those cheering on reality TV show competition

ALYSSA MCDONALD
alyssa.mcdonald@metronews.ca

The yellow and red route markers might have gone unnoticed by many people in Regina on Monday — but not by Amazing Race fans.

They knew the markers seen around town — at Regina International Airport, at city hall and at Mosaic Stadium — meant that competitors of television's Amazing Race Canada had descended on the Queen City.

"I have been trying to catch them, but it's been hard. Someone told me they were coming here so we kind of took a personal day off to come here," said Kelsey McDonald, who snapped a photograph of herself with a route marker at the stadium.

"This is my whole Amazing Race day."

The Saskatchewan Roughriders had posted a Facebook message to their 130,000 followers on May 2 about a "travel adventure show" filming at the stadium on Monday, and had asked fans to come wearing their green and white beginning at 10 a.m. and until as late as 5 p.m.

"I'm a giant Rider fan and was like, any reason to go and sit in the sun at the stadium ... we all love The Amazing Race," said Stefanie Ward, who sat in the stands with three friends, all decked out in Riders gear — watermelon helmets included.

An obstacle course of sorts was seen on the football field. Other sightings, according to Regina fans, included Ukrainian dancing in front of city hall and contestants rushing through the airport.

The filming of Amazing Race Canada began on May 3 but CTV has not released many details of the show or identified its host. The network confirmed last week that the program will air on Monday nights starting July 15 and that the prize for the winning team is $250,000, free worldwide trips for a year with Air Canada and two 2014 Chevrolet Corvette Stingrays.

CTV did not return a call from Metro News to comment or to confirm the show's filming in Regina.

No, the season hasn't started yet. Riders fans, cheerleaders and players were seen during the shooting of Amazing Race Canada at Mosaic Stadium with rumoured show host and Canadian Olympic gold medallist Jon Montgomery on Monday morning. ALYSSA MCDONALD/METRO

All aboard! Southern Prairie Railway hits tracks

The Southern Prairie Railway leaves Horizon, Sask., as it kicks off its second season with a run from Ogema to Horizon on Sunday. ROY ANTAL/THE CANADIAN PRESS

The Southern Prairie Railway is about to start its second year of tours in Saskatchewan. The refurbished 1922 passenger coach runs out of Ogema, about 120 kilometres south of Regina, and passengers are lining up.

Cheryl Generous, CEO of Southern Prairie Railway, says the train attracts people of all ages.

"We get people in their 90s that are coming and telling us the stories of when they would come to the train station when they were children and how it affected their lives. And you just see the nostalgia just coming out of them. It's a love affair," she says.

"You can just see the passion in their eyes."

Generous says there were many in Ogema who dreamed of a tourist railway. With great help from the community, Generous says, Southern Prairie Railway was born.

It runs several tours from May through the fall. The most frequently offered one is the Heritage Train tour, which runs west along the old CPR branch line to Horizon, Sask., and includes a tour of an old grain elevator. The tour lasts a couple of hours.

But if you're travelling on the second Saturday of the month, be prepared for a hold-up — literally. Tours on those days will be robbed by "guys and gals on horseback," says Generous.

The "loot" is actually for charity. For example, one of the four "robberies" is to raise money for juvenile diabetes and the money will go to the Canadian Diabetes Association. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Police stop leads to chase, charges

A Regina male is facing multiple charges including trafficking cocaine, possession of the proceeds of crime under $5,000 and breach of probation after an arrest on Friday night.

At around 9:15 p.m. on Friday members of the Regina Police Service attempted to stop a vehicle. A Regina male fled his vehicle and was apprehended on foot by officers, police said, adding that 2.77 grams of cocaine, over $1,200 in cash, a black handgun-style pellet gun, and three cellphones were found in the man's vehicle. Youth in court on assault charge

A 17-year-old male was in Youth Court on Monday for a charge of aggravated assault following an incident on May 11 that sent an adult male to hospital with serious injuries.

On May 11, police were dispatched to a house for a report of an injured person. Upon arrival police found a seriously injured 36-year-old male. A male youth present at the house was then taken into custody without incident. The suspect and victim are members of the same household. Police investigated the incident as a domestic-related assault. METRO

Just politics? American administration files morning-after pill appeal

The Obama administration on Monday filed a last-minute appeal to delay the sale of the morning-after contraceptive pill to girls of any age without a prescription.

The appeal asked a court to postpone a federal judge's ruling that eliminated age limits on the pill while the government appeals that overall decision. U.S. District Court Judge Edward Korman has said that politics was behind efforts by Secretary of Health Kathleen Sebelius to block the unrestricted sale of the Plan B One-Step morning-after pill and generic competitors. He ordered that the pill be made available without prescription and without age restrictions. He also denied a request to postpone his ruling while the government appealed. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bugs can help fight world hunger: UN food agency

Feed the world.
Certain beetles, ants, crickets and grasshoppers come close to lean red meat in protein per gram

The UN has new weapons to fight hunger, boost nutrition and reduce pollution, and they might be crawling or flying near you right now: edible insects.

The Food and Agriculture Organization on Monday hailed the likes of grasshoppers, ants and other members of the insect world as an underutilized food for people, livestock and pets.

A 200-page report, released at a news conference at the UN agency's Rome headquarters, says two billion people worldwide already supplement their diets with insects, which are high in protein and minerals, and have environmental benefits.

Insects are "extremely efficient" in converting feed into edible meat, the agency said. On average, they can convert two kg of feed into one kg of insect mass. In comparison, cattle require eight kg of feed to produce a kilo of meat. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

But are they tasty?

Insect farming is "one of the many ways to address food and feed security," the UN's food and agriculture agency said.

- Currently, most edible insects are gathered in forests, and what insect farming does take place is often family-run and serves niche markets.
- Insects are rich in copper, iron, magnesium, manganese, zinc and fiber.

Colorado shootings. Holmes asks for insanity plea

The suspect in the deadly Colorado cinema shootings asked a judge Monday to enter a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, a move that is widely seen as James Holmes' best hope of avoiding the death penalty.

Holmes is charged with murder and attempted murder in the July 20 attack in Aurora that killed 12 and injured 70.

Attorney Daniel King made the request in court, saying attorneys now have a diagnosis for James Holmes. He didn't specify what it was.

The judge was expected to decide whether to accept a new plea sometime before a May 31 hearing. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Life and death

The insanity plea carries risks for both sides.

- Holmes will have to submit to a mental evaluation by state-employed doctors, and prosecutors can use findings against him. If acquitted, Holmes would be committed to the state mental hospital indefinitely.

'Are you human?': Abortion doctor found guilty of murder

House of horrors. Dr. Kermit Gosnell may face death penalty

A Philadelphia abortion doctor was found guilty Monday of first-degree murder and could face execution in the deaths of three babies who authorities say were delivered alive and then killed with scissors at his grimy clinic, in a case that became a flashpoint in America's debate over abortion.

Dr. Kermit Gosnell, 72, was also found guilty of involuntary manslaughter in the drug-overdose death of a patient who had undergone an abortion.

He was cleared in the death of a fourth baby, who prosecutors say let out a soft whimper before he snipped its neck. The jury will return May 21 to hear evidence on whether Gosnell should get the death penalty.

Former clinic employees testified that Gosnell routinely performed illegal late-term abortions past Pennsylvania's 24-week limit, that he delivered babies who were still moving, whimpering or breathing, and that he and his assistants "snipped" the newborns' spines, as he referred to it.

"Are you human?" prosecutor Ed Cameron snarled during closing arguments as Gosnell sat calmly at the defence table. "To med these women up and stick knives in the backs of babies?"

The grisly details came out more than two years ago during an investigation of prescription drug trafficking at Gosnell's clinic in an impoverished section of west Philadelphia. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cleveland abduction. City torn on whether to demolish or preserve suspect's house

An imposing privacy fence has been erected to guard the home of rape and kidnapping suspect Ariel Castro, with windows and doors boarded shut to keep people out of the place that police say was once meant only to keep people in.

Patrol cars were still parked across the entrances to the block on Monday to keep away onlookers. The fence is 10 feet (3.05 meters) tall.

The run-down house has become a two-story piece of evidence in the abduction and imprisonment case of three women, but neighbours who remain shaken by the horrors that allegedly took place inside want it torn down and erased from the landscape of Seymour Avenue.

"The girls that were in that house, when they ride by there, if they ever ride by there again, they won't have to see that, to remind them or maybe scare them," said Johnny Wright, 54, who can see the back of the house from his front door.

The house and what becomes of it will be a daily talking point for the neighbourhood as city officials deal with the irony of keeping the dreaded site of the women's imprisonment safe while neighbours almost uniformly want it torn down.

Cleveland officials are trying to keep this house — where three women were allegedly held captive — intact until the trial of the women's suspected abductor is over. TONY DEJAK/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The issue isn't simple.

First and foremost, the house is evidence against Castro, who investigators say kept the women in chains in a basement before eventually allowing them to live under close control upstairs. The 6-year-old daughter of one victim, Amanda Berry, was also freed; DNA tests showed Castro was her father, a dark twist on years of captivity during which Castro is also alleged to have induced multiple miscarriages in one of the women by repeatedly punching her belly.

The nondescript white house with a red-and-white tile roof sits on a street of other boarded-up houses, victims of the foreclosure crisis, which hit the city hard. The house has thousands of dollars in unpaid tax liens, which would have to be sorted out as the city attempts to control the property. County records show it was built in 1890 and updated in 1950. Forty-two years later, Castro bought it for $12,000.

Workers over the weekend began boarding up windows and doors and erecting a metal fence around the house. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Earthbound. Astronaut Chris Hadfield puts out first music video made in space prior to return

In a high-flying, perfectly pitched first, Canadian astronaut Chris Hadfield bowed out of orbit with a music video: his own custom version of David Bowie's Space Oddity.

It's believed to be the first music video made in space, according to NASA.

The Sarnia, Ont.-born Hadfield posted his farewell just before his departure from the International Space Station, concluding a five-month mission where his use of multimedia tools earned him an international audience.

His return aboard a Russian Soyuz capsule, along with American Thomas Marshburn and Russian Roman Romanenko, was set for Monday in Kazakhstan at 8:30 p.m. Saskatchewan time.

"It's just been an extremely fulfilling and amazing experience end to end," Hadfield, 53, told Mission Control on Monday.

Hadfield, an engineer and former test pilot from Milton, Ont., became the first Canadian in charge of a spacecraft.

He also became a media darling on this trip, his third to space.

He published hundreds of photos of Earth; gained more than 850,000 Twitter followers; talked to schoolchildren; and provided videos about daily life on the orbiting lab.

Even before releasing his Bowie cover, he had shown off his musical skills in recent months. He sang often in orbit and even took part in a live Canadian coast-to-coast concert in February.

While Hadfield will be remembered most for the photography and music, his main task in space was performing over 100 science experiments. In those experiments, he examined changes to the spine, bone density and nutrition in space.

This trip is, in a sense, the end of an era for the Canadian space program. Once Hadfield lands, it will be at least three years before the next Canadian astronaut visits the space station.

Rehtaeh Parsons. Goals, methods set for review of school board's actions

The panellists reviewing how the Halifax Regional School Board handled the Rehtaeh Parsons case said they will not "name names" but hope to make policy recommendations to "prevent something like this from ever happening again."

Panellists Debra Pepler and Penny Milton released the interim report Monday, which outlines their methods and goals for the review.

"By figuring out where the gaps are and the challenges are ... we may be able to provide guidelines so students who struggle are supported," said Pepler, a professor at York University.

Parsons, 17, took her own life in early April, two years after she was allegedly gang-raped and then bullied over a photo of the incident.

Milton said the panel will attempt to answer 10 questions related to policies, training and guidelines respecting bullying, cyberbullying and sexual violence.

Rehtaeh Parsons FACEBOOK

In order for people to be as open as possible, all interviews will be anonymous.

"We ... (are) looking at the issues from all the different vantage points … and we want to hear the complexity of their experience," said Milton, a former CEO of the Canadian Education Association.

The review will not establish the facts of Parson's case because of the current police investigation.

"That's not the core of our mandate," Milton said.

Brazil's booming auto market rife with unsafe cars

Sao Paulo. Thousands die yearly in accidents that frequently should not have proven fatal

This 2011 photo released by Proteste, a consumer defence group, shows a crash test on a Chevrolet Celta vehicle in Brazil. PROTESTE/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The cars roll endlessly off the local assembly lines of the industry's biggest automakers, more than 10,000 a day, into the eager hands of Brazil's new middle class. The shiny new Fords, Fiats, and Chevrolets tell the tale of an economy in full bloom that now boasts the fourth largest auto market in the world.

What happens once those vehicles hit the streets, however, is shaping up as a national tragedy, experts say, with thousands of Brazilians dying every year in auto accidents that in many cases shouldn't have proven fatal.

The culprits are the cars themselves, produced with weaker welds, scant safety features and inferior materials compared to similar models manufactured for U.S. and European consumers, say experts and engineers inside the industry. Four of Brazil's five bestselling cars failed their independent crash tests.

Unsafe cars, coupled with the South American nation's often dangerous driving conditions, have resulted in a Brazilian death rate from passenger car accidents that is nearly four times that of the United States, according to an Associated Press analysis of Brazilian Health Ministry data on deaths compared to the size of each country's car fleet.

In fact, the two countries are moving in opposite directions on survival rates — the U.S. recorded 40 per cent fewer fatalities from car wrecks in 2010 compared with a decade before. In Brazil, the number killed rose 72 per cent, according to the latest available data.

Swedish fashion retailer H&M said Monday that it will sign up to a legally binding fire and building safety plan drawn up by unions in Bangladesh, following the deaths of hundreds of garment workers in a building collapse there last month.

The company described safety issues as "extremely important," saying that it supports the Accord on Fire and Building Safety in Bangladesh, initiated by IndustriALL Global Union.

"The parties will be committed to the goal of a safe and sustainable Bangladeshi Ready Made Garment industry in which no worker needs to fear fires, building collapses or other accidents that could be prevented with reasonable health and safety measures," H&M said in a press release.

Washington. Monsanto wins soybean court fight

The U.S. Supreme Court said Monday that an Indiana farmer violated Monsanto Co.'s patents on soybean seeds resistant to its weed-killer by growing the beans without buying new seeds from the corporation.

The justices unanimously rejected the farmer's argument that cheap soybeans he bought from a grain elevator are not covered by the Monsanto patents, even though most of them also were genetically modified to resist the company's Roundup herbicide.

While Monsanto won this case, the court refused to make a sweeping decision that would cover other self-replicating technologies like DNA molecules and nanotechnologies.

Jessica Napier
metronews.ca

From the cherry blossom trees lining the streets of Vancouver to Ottawa's brightly coloured tulips, the country is truly in bloom. Unfortunately for some of us, the pleasures of springtime are obstructed from view as we spend most of the season with our faces buried in a handful of tissue.

Seasonal allergies aren't exactly a high-profile disease; there's no colourful ribbon campaign for hay fever and no celebrity spokesperson to offer tips on overcoming itching, watering eyes. Telling someone you have allergies usually garners the same amount of sympathy as mentioning you have a nasty paper cut. And yet, for a few weeks of the year allergies are so much more than a minor annoyance — they are a totally life-ruining experience.

Thirty per cent of Canadians test positive to one or more allergens, which means there are plenty of us loading up on a potent cocktail of antihistamines, eye drops and triple-shot lattes just to make it out the door in the morning. Record-breaking precipitation throughout the winter and high levels of carbon dioxide in the air are nurturing pollen-producing trees and plants across the country. Increased moisture and delayed springtime temperatures have caused airborne pollen counts to skyrocket, which is making this allergy season (like every one before) feel like the Worst. Year. Ever.

My annual springtime ritual involves bookmarking the Weather Network's online pollen forecast, barricading my apartment windows and waiting desperately for the heat of summer to arrive. I occasionally leave my cocoon of isolation to trek to the drugstore, where I spend obscene amounts of money on antihistamines in the hopes that maybe this year someone has developed a new formula that actually works. Over-the-counter medications are costly and usually ineffective but I won't deny that I enjoy the sedating and mildly addictive feelings of drowsiness that come with a heavy dose of nighttime medication.

But could there be a silver lining to these weeks of allergy-related anguish?

Some scientists purport that allergic reactions have evolved over the years as a way for our bodies to expel germs, carcinogens and other harmful toxins. The symptoms of typical pollen allergies — repetitious sneezing, runny noses and the unrelenting sensation of wanting to claw your eyes out — might actually be the body's way of protecting itself against potentially mutation-causing environmental contaminants. Numerous studies have linked allergy sufferers to reduced rates of various types of cancer — including ovarian, lung, skin, throat and intestinal cancers.

A sensitive body that's constantly on the defensive might not be such a bad thing. Despite our weak exteriors, those of us made miserable by seasonal allergies are actually stronger in some ways than the average person — even if a bunch of brightly coloured flowers can reduce us to a teary, snivelling mess.

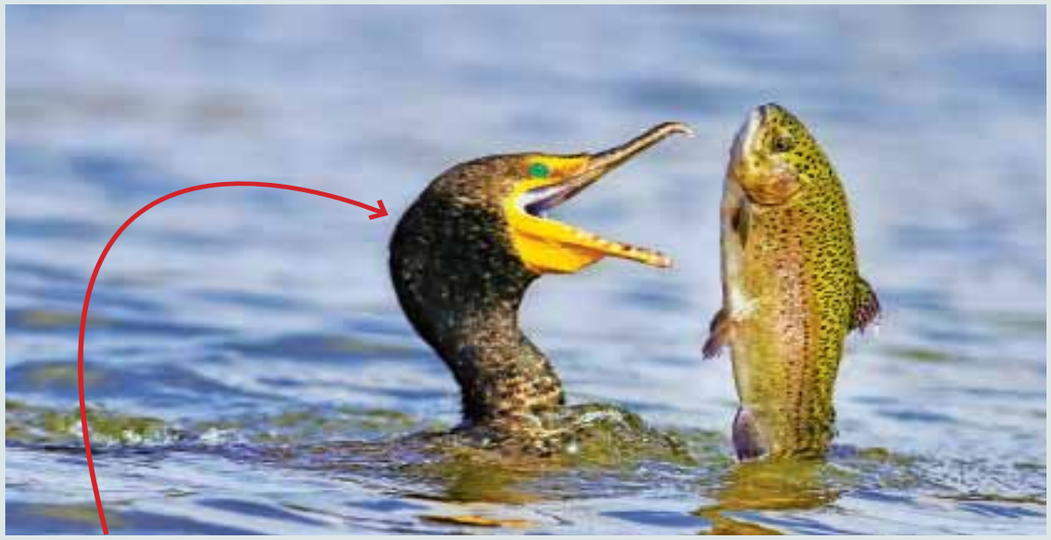
A fish's final moment



DR. ANDREW LEE/SOLENT NEWS

I'm going to bite you now

This cormorant bird does its own fishing by waiting patiently before pouncing to catch a rainbow trout in its bill.

The two animals even appear to look each other straight in the eye before the bird enjoys its lunch. Amateur photographer Andrew Lee captured this moment at El Dorado Regional Park in Long Beach, Calif.

The photographer recalls the bittersweet moment when he captured this unique image of the natural world.

"I felt a little sad for the fish, but I took comfort in knowing that I would be able to tell a story of the fish's final moment," says Lee.

"I hope that the photograph shows the viewer the daily struggle of the hunter and the hunted." METRO

Lunch

"It happened in a split second. The bird was able to grab the trout before the fish disappeared into the lake. I was surprised with how big the fish was and wondered if the bird would be able to swallow it — and it did."

RE: Hard Drugs Offer Hope In Mental Health Crises, published May 9

Speaking as someone who works in harm reduction, calling mushrooms, LSD, and MDMA 'hard' drugs is pretty laughable.

I had a very interesting conversation with one of the foremost drug policy experts in the world on exactly this subject — the war on drugs is preventing us from pursuing therapies that offer real hope to countless people who suffer horribly from mental illness.

Cameron Reid posted to metronews.ca

I'm guessing it would be a limited use type of thing, surely no one would want to be off the planet constantly, but if they can take the good and leave the bad and come back with a new perspective on their problems then maybe that is all that is needed for people to move forward.

Why on Earth are mushrooms hard drugs? Isn't it a natural medicine that has been used for thousands of years?

The future of television

Power to the people. You, the consumer and producer, are in the driver's seat as the entertainment industry shifts gears

ELISABETH BRAW
Metro World News

Watching shows on your tablet while your TV set is collecting dust? Producing short videos yourself? You're not alone.

Entertainment is changing so rapidly that TV may soon be passé. Netflix has its own TV show (online). Amazon is planning to launch online entertainment. YouTube already has over one billion clicks per month and is rumoured to be planning the launch of a subscription service for several top channels.

"People are still watching as much TV as they used to, but they're also migrating to niche entertainment," explains Aymar Jean Christian, a professor of media, technology and society at Northwestern University in Illinois. "People like content that's geared toward them. For example, there's no TV show for gamers because they're a niche audience, but on the Internet there are show channels geared toward them."

And we're migrating to smaller devices, too. "Entertainment is expanding from laptops and tablets to phones," observes Alexander Halavais, president of the Association of Internet Researchers. "You can already watch full-length movies on your phone. But most people don't, so this has created a new genre: something between movie and still images."

More people are tossing their remotes and reaching for their tablets. ISTOCK

The Vine and Keek apps allow users to make six-second videos by splicing together several images.

Smartphones with their built-in cameras, which can be directed toward the user more easily than cameras, will accelerate the citizen-producer boom. This mefocused, self-produced entertainment for niche audience is chipping at the near-monopoly of professionally made shows for a general public.

Notes Halavais: "People are at an event, capture the event with their camera phones and then turn the camera to themselves to show their reaction. You could say, 'Why would it be interesting to see people's reaction to an event?' but that's the same thing many of us said when Twitter was born..."

Viewers are becoming involved with TV shows, too, submitting plot ideas and even funding films, as was the case with the Veronica Mars movie. And there will always be a niche for professionally-made shows, Observes Prof. Robert Thompson, director of the Bleier Center for Television and Popular Culture at Syracuse University: "Many of my students don't even have a TV set in their homes — they watch shows online.

But TV isn't dead just because the distribution has changed. Sometimes you don't want shows that have been produced by people like yourself. The Sopranos was definitely not created by viewers!"

ON WEDNESDAY METRO TALKS TO YOUTUBE BOSS ROBERT KYNCL ABOUT THE FUTURE OF ENTERTAINMENT.

Sports. Online streaming embraced by legit sites

Every week, millions of people enjoy live sports on their favorite screen – and don't pay a dime for it. That's because thousands of websites, often hosted in countries with a weak rule of law, illegally stream sports events. Teams and legal TV and web channels aggressively go after the websites: Britain's Premier League reports shutting down more than 30,000 sites last season.

But as soon as one website is shut down, another one pops up. And viewers don't seem to mind the shows' often inferior broadcast quality: after all, they pay nothing. Now sports channel ESPN has embraced the trend, offering free streams on its website.

MWN

Netflix series. Old product, new delivery

House of Cards, Netflix's hit drama series, is streamed online, but with its traditional structure, it looks just like prime-time TV fare. This is the entertainment of the future. The show is based on consumer input. "Netflix chose Kevin Spacey for the lead role because they had surveyed their viewers and knew that he was popular," says Prof. Aymar Jean Christian, of Northwestern University.

"They monitor how we watch, when we pause a film, which episodes we watch," says Chuck Tryon, author of new book On-Demand Culture: Digital Delivery and the Future of Movies. "It has the potential of serving as a test-screening."

MWN

Kevin Spacey was chosen for House of Cards because he appealed to viewers. HANDOUT

Three companies to watch

These companies are pushing the boundaries of entertainment. Are you using their services and apps yet?

- Twitch: Online gaming ESPN-style. On the platform Twitch, more than 30 million users every month play electronic games — but they also broadcast their own games and instant message with each other. Imagine TV sports channel ESPN combined with gaming and social media. "This is really entertainment," explains co-founder Emmett Shear, 29. "And it's as much social media. On any given day, over two million users exchange chat messages."
- Earbits: Spotify for garage bands. Say you're a new band, you can't afford to advertise or pay for an agent. There's an app for that — Earbits, a platform for music artists. "Consumers can find new music and the industry can find customers," CEO/founder Joey Flores tells Metro. "Users share things and follow bands from the platform."
- Vine & Keek: Top sites for social videos. Social video is the new Twitter. Indeed, Twitter has its own social video app, Vine, and Toronto-based Keek gets 3.2 billion page views each month. "Social video is more useful than Twitter because you really get to see people's lives," Keek founder and CEO Isaac Raichyk tells Metro. "Our videos are 36 seconds for a reason: you can tell a story about yourself, and still it's short enough that people want to watch." (These vids have a name, too: keeks.)

Lindsay Lohan ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Of pills and pounds: Lohan scared of the scales without meds?

Lindsay Lohan is reportedly not adjusting too well to her new digs at the Betty Ford Center, but she'll be in even bigger trouble if she doesn't stay put, according to Radar Online. Sources say Lohan is threatening to bail on the rehab facility and continue her court-ordered stint elsewhere because doctors there allegedly refused to let her take the prescription drug Adderall. "Lindsay is absolutely freaking out about the prospect of gaining weight now that Adderall has been taken away," a source says. "Lindsay has been able to eat whatever she has wanted and not gain weight for years, and she attributes this to Adderall." But a change of venue is definitely not in the cards, another sources explains. "The judge overseeing Lindsay's case has made it crystal clear that if she defies the agreement, it's jail time," the source says.

Selena Gomez and Justin Bieber

Scoop her up: Looks like Gomez is back in the game

This is getting difficult to keep track of. Apparently things are off again for on-again, off-again couple Justin Bieber and Selena Gomez — at least according to Gomez. When asked by a DJ at Boston's Kiss 108 during an interview if she's be available should a boy stop her on the street and ask her to grab some ice cream, she replied, "Yep!" She gave another "yep" when the DJ clarified, "You're completely available in every way?" Not only that, but apparently the ice cream approach is a good idea: "By the way, that would be awesome if someone asked if I wanted ice cream because that would be cool," Gomez said.

Kiefer Sutherland

A reason to revive your cable: Jack is back

Jack Bauer is set to have another pretty terrible day, as Fox's real-time action series 24 will return next year with a limited-run, 12-episode series, 24: Live Another Day, the network announced this week. Series star Kiefer Sutherland will return as anti-terrorism agent Jack Bauer, whom he played for eight seasons until the show wrapped up in 2010. For this new, condensed version, the 12 one-hour episodes will cover another 24-hour period in Bauer's life.

"The response to 24 is unlike anything I have ever experienced as an actor before," says Sutherland. "To have the chance to reunite with the character, Jack Bauer, is like finding a lost friend. The story ideas from Howard Gordon are exciting and fresh and will not disappoint."

Just a single baby? Will Beyoncé be touring with bun-two in the oven?

Everyone! Listen up: The New York Post is citing multiple sources that Beyoncé and her husband Jay-Z are expecting their second child. Their reps are not responding to calls for clarification.

Here's why this is dubious: Beyoncé is in the middle of a giant world tour blockbuster extravaganza; millions and millions are on the line. The Mrs. Carter Show World Tour ends Aug. 5 in Brooklyn. People love Beyoncé but people shell out major bucks for tickets to see Beyoncé doing her thing and getting all Sasha Fierce on stage.

Not a pregnant Beyoncé having to sit in a chair while on stage, which is the exact opposite of Sasha Fierce. That is Sasha Convalescence.

But, of course, she could strut through it bump and all as if we haven't figured it out by now, Beyoncé exists to make us all feel terrible about ourselves.

Hang loose and get ripped

Fitness. Founder of The People's Bootcamp gave us a sneak peak of his new workout, based on the beach bum lifestyle, called WaveShape

MEREDITH ENGEL
Metro World News

Those surfers you see killin' it on the waves? They weren't born with that ripped bod. All of that paddling and popping up and down in the water "creates that long, lean physique," says celebrity fitness trainer Adam Rosante, the founder of The People's Bootcamp. He created a new workout called WaveShape to help you get the surfer's body of your dreams.

Rosante's workout is based in a framework he dubs "power intervals," which improve endurance. The moves are done over a series of 30 seconds, so you can focus on form, not reps. You can learn the full series (12 moves) when it launches June 1 as a free online community with video at getinwaveshape.com. Rosante gave us a sneak peak at five of the moves that'll get your body in surf shape.

How to do it

What you need to know

- Round one. Perform each move back to back for 30 seconds each with no rest. That's round one.
- Keep going. Rest 30 seconds and repeat this format twice more for a total of three rounds.
- Be careful. Go at your own pace.

Step 1

Leg Rippers

Stand with feet slightly wider than hip width apart. Interlace your fingers and raise your hands over your right shoulder. Brace your core, open your chest and pull your shoulders down your back. Step out to the left into a side lunge, be sure to push the hips back and keep the left knee behind the toes, as you bring your hands down diagonally across your body to the outside of your left foot. Return to centre, raising the left knee high as you explosively jump off the right foot. Land softly. Repeat on the left side for the full 30 seconds, then switch and perform the move with hands over the left shoulder, stepping out to the right.

Step 2

Agility Jumps

Stand with feet slightly wider than hip width apart. Brace the core as you bend the knees into a low squat, arms extended behind the back for stability. Pause only briefly at the bottom of the movement and explosively jump up and forward over an imaginary line far out in front of you. Land softly, pushing the hips back to absorb the impact, and immediately jump backward to land in the starting position. Repeat the jump, this time turning the body mid-air to land 180 degrees in the opposite direction. Once again, repeat the 180 jump to land softly back at the starting position. That's one rep. Continue repeating.

Step 3

Tap Dogs

Assume a push-up position with wrists directly under shoulders. Tap the left shoulder with right fingertips and return the hand to the floor. Tap the right shoulder with the left fingertips and return the hand to the floor. Perform a pushup. At the top of the motion, brace the core as you extend the right arm and left leg until they are parallel to the floor. Lower the arm and leg. Now extend the left arm and right leg until parallel to the floor. Lower the arm and leg. That's one rep. Repeat.

Step 4

Surfies

Begin in a squat position with your hands on the floor, wrists positioned under your shoulders. Kick your feet back to a plank position. Immediately shoot the feet forward, twisting your torso and lower half so that you land facing left. Stand tall as you open the chest and squeeze the core and glutes. Twist back down to the right to place hands back in the starting position and kick the feet back to the starting position. You should be right where you started at the top of a plank position. Repeat, this time twisting to the right. Continue alternating sides. As you perform the move, you should look like a surfer popping up on a board.

Step 5

High-Lows

Assume a push-up position with wrists directly below the shoulders. Slowly lower the left forearm to the floor, elbow directly below the shoulder, and then the right forearm. Return, one hand at a time, to the top of a push-up position. Continue lowering and raising.

My favourite salads are those combining fruit, an intense cheese and a sweet vinegar dressing — like this one.

Mangoes contain an abundance of beta carotene and antioxidants, which are thought to prevent disease. You can substitute ripe pears, peaches, strawberries or blueberries (also an antioxidant) for the mango.

1. Toss greens, endive, radicchio, mango, cheese and olives together in a bowl.

2. Whisk vinegar, olive oil, honey, sesame oil and garlic together in a bowl. Pour over the salad and toss to coat. ROSE REISMAN'S COMPLETE LIGHT KITCHEN (WHITECAP BOOKS) BY ROSE REISMAN

Even before the crocuses and bluebells in my garden, the chives started pushing through the yet to be removed dead leaves of last fall. The great part about chives is that they can be trimmed at this early stage and keep you in oniony snips right through fall.

Chives contain allicin, which can lower cholesterol and blood pressure. They are also high in antioxidants and are believed to be anti-fungal. With all that going for them, it is a shame we only sprinkle a little on a baked potato once in a while.

Try this:

- In a blender, blend one cup of extra virgin olive oil, half a cup chopped chives, juice of half a lemon, pinch of salt and a teaspoon of honey. Use as a drizzle for grilled fish or chicken.
- Mince chives and add to pancake batter to create a savoury side dish.
- Add to scrambled eggs.
- Blend into softened butter and freeze in teaspoonfuls, top a sizzling steak with a dollop.
- Chop and freeze in ice cube trays to add to dips, dishes and dressings.

Peppery, earthy P.E.I. taste — lobster and all

Chef Michael Smith, who hails from Fortune, P.E.I., is at the heart of Canada's lobster fishery.

His salad combines the earthy heartiness of lentils, the luxurious sweetness of lobster and arugula's peppery flavour.

1. Lentils: In a medium saucepan over medium-high heat, bring water, lentils and salt to a boil. Reduce heat to maintain a simmer and continue cooking and tasting just until lentils are tender, 15 to 20 minutes. Strain any excess water and let lentils cool to room temperature.

2. Lobster: Meanwhile, in a large pot, bring water and salt to a vigorous boil. Remove rubber bands from claws of lobster by firmly grasping and crossing the claws over the body. After doing this, plunge lobsters into water and cook for 15 minutes.

3. Let the cooked lobsters cool until you can handle them. Protect your hands with a pair of gloves and remove all the meat from the tail, knuckles and claws. Grasp the lobster firmly by the tail and head and twist off tail. Crush in your hand to break shell, then pry apart tail. Break claw open with the back of a knife or nut cracker. Cut open knuckles.

4. In a large salad bowl, whisk together oil, vinegar, honey, mustard and salt. Toss in vegetables and cooked lentils.

5. Just before serving, add lobster and arugula and toss everything together thoroughly, evenly distributing vinaigrette.

Two perspectives of a major milestone: high school graduation

Cap and gown. A mother and daughter share their thoughts ahead of the big day

THERESA ALBERT
AND JAMESON RATCHFORD
life@metronews.ca

Mom says:

It's the anticipation of the emptiness that is the worst. Will the whole day fall apart when she is isn't home for dinner?

For 18 years the structure of our home and our lives has revolved around her. From night feeding to after school programs and daycare and, later, to dance class and dates. Whether she knew it or not, our entire process ebbed and flowed with what she needed. The communication between mom and dad needed to happen for her benefit. Now that it is just two capable adults, who will be home for dinner? Who will make it? Who will care?

Suddenly the music blaring from the bathroom during her morning shower doesn't annoy me at all. So what if I can't think enough to work? I stop and realize that this joyful noise will soon be silence.

Her backpack, boots, dishes, books, scarves and dance clothes clutter my hallway. I bend to pick them up lovingly now, not resentfully.

I can pass by her room and look at the teen mess and smell the waft of one too many hair, face and body products and not feel like gagging. I choke back the tears instead. I go in and breathe deeply.

Time won't stop barrelling down on us but I can stop the moment from flying away by appreciating it for all its beauty.

What saves me from crying is the knowledge that she isn't really going anywhere.

She is growing her life and she will bring it back home twofold. New friends and their noise, dirty plates and laughter will join. New books and ideas will inspire as they are being learned by her. She may meet her life partner and the group will grow, not shrink. That is all that has ever been asked of her — keep growing. The day to day may change, but the big picture remains the same.

Daughter says:

For a while, I was thinking about graduation as just a day, a few hours before the rest of my life.

Until recently, when I realized that graduation and its status as a rite of passage has lost its grandeur. Graduation is a full stage in our lives because the series of events that lead up to it and the events that follow can define us.

To our cohorts we can be known for the post secondary school we have chosen to attend after the comfortable confines of our high school. To our neighbours who watched us grow and who trust us with their kids on date night, we can become known as a teen who speeds up the street in their parent's minivan or the kid who shovels every day for those who can't in the winter, or both. To our closest friends, nothing really changes apart from the sudden onslaught of a sense of "never enough time."

Most importantly, to our parents, we are no longer the loud morning shower music, the stray socks and boots in the hall to trip over or the slamming doors. We become "remember whens," pickers on a money orchard and fleeting moments.

The cap and gown fever may only last a few hours but our memories of this time simply can't be forgotten.

It could be a hot stock summer ... or not

Alison on money. Thinking about selling your stocks and getting back in the market in November?

YOUR MONEY
Alison Griffiths
money@metronews.ca

It's May, so is it time to sell and go away until St. Leger Day? That's the old stock market saying. St. Leger Day, by the way, was the last British horse racing event of the season in mid-September. Presumably, stock market traders then got back to work after betting on the ponies all summer.

On average, late spring to Halloween contains the two worst months for the stock market, September and October and the most volatile month, May.

Market timers often try to get ahead of this trend by selling out in May and getting back in before the stronger markets of November to April. This is especially true after stocks have soared, as they have done since the sag of November 2012.

The Dow Jones and the S&P 500 have hit record highs. The Canadian market, now under 13,000, is well off its 2008 high of 15,073, but it has started to find its legs.

Market timing doesn't always work out. Will this be a summer from hell? ISTOCK IMAGES

These numbers make investors nervous that the end is nigh. Previous busts such as the financial collapse of 2008 underscore the fact that good times don't last forever.

The trouble is, we investors tend to be lousy when it comes to market timing, seasonal or otherwise.

Who knows if this will be a summer from hell? But there is one way to protect yourself should it come to pass.

Look at your investment statement (or ask your advisor) to determine what percentage you have in equities. It has likely risen significantly over the past couple of years.

That means it's time to prune equity investments or devote new money (RRSP contributions, for example) to fixed income. The latter is much easier to do than the former.

We humans hate to sell something that is going up.

However, if you want 50 per cent in equities for your RRSP and it is now sitting at 70 per cent or more, you are exposing yourself to risk.

Remember, stock market declines usually happen too quickly for regular investing folk to react. So be proactive, even if it means missing out on a hot stock summer.

Mike Weir got his professional start on the Canadian Tour, which has produced many elite golfers. The new PGA Tour Canada will host eight tournaments across the country this year. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE FILE

RICHARD WOODBURY
For Metro

What do golfers Mike Weir, Steve Stricker and Stuart Appleby have in common? All of them played on the Canadian Tour at one point in time. In fact, former Canadian Tour players have accounted for more than 110 victories on the PGA Tour.

Last Nov. 1, operational control of the Canadian Tour was taken over by the PGA Tour and the Canadian Tour was renamed PGA Tour Canada.

For its debut season, there will be eight tournaments spread across Canada.

"We think it's very important to be across Canada," says Jeff Monday, the president of PGA Tour Canada.

The season kicks off in early June with the Times Colonist Island Savings Open in Victoria and works its way east, going as far as Nova Scotia. The plan is to expand the tour schedule to 12 or 13 events per year.

"We would love to add another event in Atlantic Canada, be it in Newfoundland or P.E.I. or anywhere else out there to be able to play two weeks in Atlantic Canada," Monday says.

He says the tour also wants to schedule an event in Quebec.

All of the tournaments scheduled for this year have a purse of $150,000, with the winner's share being $27,000.

However, one of the biggest perks of playing successfully on the tour will be that the top five players on the money list will graduate directly to the Web.com Tour, the PGA Tour's primary developmental tour.

Also, those finishing six to 10 on the money list will get an exemption into the final stage of the Web.com Tour's qualifying school, while those finishing 11 to 20 will get an exemption into the second stage.

"We always want to reward season-long performance," says Monday, noting these features will help successful PGA Tour Canada players move on to the next level of competition.

As well, these policies will help attract better players to compete on PGA Tour Canada. The early indications are that it is working. This year's qualifying school attracted a record number of players.

"The calibre of play will certainly step up," Monday says.

Trends. Latest equipment

Technology in the golf industry continues to evolve in such rapid fashion that the contents of a typical golf bag now resemble the tactical gear of a Navy SEAL.

The latest equipment for 2013 won't change that trend, notes Dwayne Boecker, the director of field merchandising for Golf Town. Boecker recommends seven high-tech items, in particular, that will whet a golfer's appetite, as follows:.

Garmin G6 Approach GPS
The sleek, handheld G6 (in the $300 range) includes more than 27,000 preloaded worldwide courses and an internal rechargeable battery. Colourful distance arcs indicate how far you need to hit when laying up, while touch targeting lets you touch any point on the sunlight-readable display to find the precise distance to that spot.

SkyPro Swing Analyzer
Endorsed by the Golf Channel's Michael Breed, the ultra-lightweight SkyPro (also around $250) attaches just below the grip and captures as many as 10,000 data points, from clubhead speed to impact position, and then sends the information via Bluetooth to your smartphone app. And you don't even have to push a button.

TaylorMade R1 Driver
Movable weights allow the R1 (around $450) to be tuned 168 different ways, including 12 lofts and seven face-angle settings. Improved aerodynamics reduce drag over the head for faster clubhead speed, a higher launch and lower spin.

Titleist Pro V1
The hugely popular, Tour-proven Pro V1 has been amped up even more in 2013, combining exceptional distance with soft feel and "drop-and-stop" greenside control. Sells for around $55.

Nike VRS Covert Driver
Cited as the world's first high-speed cavity-back driver, the Covert can be adjusted for lofts from 8.5 to 12.5 degrees and three face angle positions. Enhanced NexCOR face technology creates a 45 per cent larger hot zone for more distance and workability. Sells for around $340.

Adidas adizero Solid Polo
Players can make a statement in bright yellow, while the tailored fit of this moisture-wicking, mesh-ventilated, 100 per cent polyester polo (around $85) allows for an unrestricted swing. The adizero's self-collar keeps its shape wear after wear.

Ecco Biom Hybrid Shoe
Walk straight off the golf course to a night on the town with the Ecco Biom Hybrid — a spikeless shoe with more than 150 moulded traction bars for gripping power, but a casual style with a high-performance upper made of strong, lightweight, breathable and abrasion-resistant yak leather that provides maximum comfort and an anatomically shaped insole. Sells for around $240.

Tee up a budget fore your day on the links

RICHARD WOODBURY
For Metro

Before anyone can hit the links, they will need clubs, which will cost anywhere from a few hundred dollars to an amount in the thousands.

A full set of men's clubs for a current name brand product, such as TaylorMade, Callaway or Titleist, will cost around $2,000, says Scott Staub, a salesperson with Caddy Shed, a golf shop in Winnipeg. Items such as a bag and miscellaneous items like balls, tees and gloves are factored into that price.

A cheaper alternative is to get last year's product line, which is an option for most vendors. Staub says the savings could amount to around $500 or $600.

Interestingly, while the men's name brand clubs are sold à la carte, that's not the case for women's clubs.

"They are very lucky compared to the men in that there are numerous full packages for women that are fantastic for under $1,000," says Staub, adding this would include brands such as Adams, Callaway and Nike.

For people looking to get a decent set of clubs not manufactured by one of the big brands, they can walk away spending somewhere between $400 and $600. This would be a good option for someone who is new to the game and not sure if they will stick with it.

A good pair of shoes is also a wise investment and they can be purchased for around $150, although one could easily spend more than $300.

But what can people expect to pay for a membership? Well, that's highly variable. Courses in rural areas are generally significantly cheaper than ones in larger urban centres.

Phil Grosse, the manager of sport development and marketing for Golf Saskatchewan — which bills Saskatchewan as Canada's affordable golf destination — says memberships in some golf courses in rural Saskatchewan communities go for as little as $250, while in a larger locale, they may cost somewhere between $1,300 and $1,800. In fact, Grosse's father just paid $4,100 for an annual membership.

The reality is when it comes to golf, people can pretty much spend as much as they want to — and that holds true across the country.

Golf can help kids with life values

Introduction. Program bringing golf to kids at thousands of schools across the country

RICHARD WOODBURY
For Metro

For most people, the thought of gym class brings back memories of the staples, such as dodgeball, floor hockey and soccer, but golf is now being included in the curriculum at thousands of schools across the country. This is thanks to a program called Golf in Schools (GIS) that was developed by Golf Canada.

The program provides both the equipment and lesson plans needed to teach kids the fundamental movement skills and golf skills involved in playing the game.

While fair play and sportsmanship are part of most sports, golf is one that takes it a step further.

"A big part of golf is the life lessons, the social skills, behaviour, etiquette, manners — all the good life values that the game can teach, so we try to promote that through the program," says Kelly Woloshyn, GIS's coordinator.

She feels this element of the game is just as important as learning how to swing the club.

First introduced in 2009 at the elementary level, there are now 2,000 schools across the country participating in GIS. "We have schools covered in every province, including the territories," Woloshyn says.

At the high school level, GIS was introduced in June 2012 and 150 schools are now participating. Schools from every province are represented, as well as one lone school in Nunavut.

The cost of the program is $475 per school at the elementary level and $795 at the high school level. Both programs include both the necessary lesson plans and equipment.

The difference in price can be attributed to the better equipment needed at the high school level. For example, the clubs at the elementary level are made of plastic, but at the high school level, they are real.

With education budgets as tight as they are nowadays, the program may be cost-prohibitive for some schools. For this reason, GIS has an adopt-a-school program where people can pay for the program.

Perhaps not surprisingly, golf clubs are a big supporter of the adopt-a-school program.

An added bonus of the adopt-a-school program is that the donation is eligible for a charitable tax receipt.

Closing the deal

The very mention of a few people playing golf together for the purpose of doing business can definitely generate some eye rolling, but one expert argues that it's the perfect place to do business.

"The thing that is most interesting to me about golf is you can learn more about somebody from a round of golf than from weeks and weeks of hanging out with them," says Richard Brasser, a former professional golfer who once wrote a book about conducting business on the golf course.

As every golfer knows, golf is an emotional roller-coaster that will put most of one's emotions on display in a round. Frustration, happiness and anger are a few that come to mind. From a business perspective, this gives people a good idea of how one reacts to certain situations. "It's probably one of the best tests of character," Brasser says.

Another great thing is that because playing a round will take somewhere between four and five hours, it allows for a lot of one-on-one interaction, as opposed to a traditional meeting, which is not likely to be scheduled for that long.

To have a successful day on the links, people will need to remember that the primary motivation is having a good time.

"I can guarantee you that nobody else in the group cares about how you play and every single person will care about how you act," Brasser says.

Underdog Sens look to erase mighty Pens

NHL playoffs. Ottawa team full of confidence heading into second-round series against top seed in East

The Ottawa Senators have proven they can get results as an underdog. They have overcome long odds this season and are coming off an impressive series victory over Montreal.

The next challenge is a big one but the Senators are ready and loaded with confidence.

Ottawa will face the top-seeded Penguins in the Eastern Conference semifinal beginning Tuesday night in Pittsburgh. The Senators, who knocked off the second-seeded Canadiens in five games, will need a strong team effort and solid goaltending to compete with the Atlantic Division champions.

"I'm sure everyone's writing us off to lose this round, I'm assuming," said Marc Methot. "It's an opportunity for us to prove a lot of people wrong and see if we can create an upset."

Pittsburgh is loaded with star players, but the one area the Senators may have an advantage is in goal. Craig Anderson was clearly the difference for Ottawa in the first round and he'll be counted on again against the Pens.

The Senators have also displayed an offensive spark of late along with a willingness to get physical.

"Once you're here you don't think anything is impossible and we believe that," said Ottawa captain Daniel Alfredsson. "We think we can give a Pittsburgh team a tough run and even win this series. We also respect them and their abilities and what they've shown this year and it's going to take an effort from everybody to have a chance." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Star-laden team

Star forwards Sidney Crosby, Evgeni Malkin and Jarome Iginla lead a deep Pittsburgh lineup that's coming off a six-game win over the New York Islanders. The Senators will need to contain that explosive offence if they have any hope of keeping the series close.

- The Penguins have the best power play of all playoff teams with a success rate of 33.3 per cent.

Bruins destroy Leafs late in Game 7

Patrice Bergeron scored at 6:05 of overtime to complete a miraculous Boston comeback as the Bruins rallied to oust the Toronto Maple Leafs from the playoffs with a nail-biting 5-4 win in Game 7 Monday night.

Bergeron, with his second of the night, ended it as the Bruins blitzed the Toronto goal. The Leafs could not clear the puck and the Bruins forward snapped home a shot.

Two late goals in the space of 31 seconds by Boston's Milan Lucic and Bergeron, with goalie Tuukka Rask off for the extra attacker, shockingly tied the game up at 4-4.

The Leafs led 4-1 midway through the third period when the Bruins started pulling rabbits out of their hat with three unanswered goals — the last two with the clock running out.

A lapse of concentration in their most recent game aside, the Canadians have melded into a contending team at the IIHF World Championship on little preparation.

Canada heads into Thursday's quarter-final game with firepower on offence, an improving blue-line and goaltending capable of getting wins.

The quarter-final has been Canada's stumbling block in this tournament with losses in the last three consecutive years.

"We realize that," forward Steven Stamkos said. "The last three years, I think, have been early exits and it's not going to get any easier."

Canada awaits the conclusion of the preliminary round Tuesday to confirm its quarter-final opponent. Montreal Canadiens defenceman P.K. Subban was added to the team Monday and will play in the quarter-final.

A 4-3 overtime win over relegated Slovenia on Monday gave Canada 18 points from five wins, an overtime win and a shootout loss in the round robin.

Unbeaten Switzerland was one point back with a game in hand. The Swiss need just a point Tuesday against Belarus to secure first place.

In Monday's victory, Canada was down 2-0 before Matt Duchene and Stamkos pulled Canada even.

Stamkos then scored his second goal of the game on a breakaway in overtime.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
Someone is trying to get one over on you and you have every right to be annoyed, but is it worth it? There is no way they are going to succeed at cheating you so ignore them.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
There is no point blaming yourself because a project went wrong. There were so many people involved and so many factors at work that no one person was truly to blame.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
You need to pace yourself carefully now because the planets warn you are not as robust health-wise as you seem to believe. Even a go-getting Gemini needs a bit of down time occasionally.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
Whatever your highest ideal happens to be, that is what you should now be aiming for. Of course, you won't reach your goal immediately but you'll be heading in the right direction – and that's what matters.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
You are finding it hard to focus on one specific thing — your mind is all over the place. That's OK. There is no point trying to force your thoughts in directions they clearly don't want to go. Take the hint.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
If a particular method works for you then stick with it. Others may say it's old-fashioned, but so what? The more critical they are, the more you suspect it's the right choice.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Let your imagination roam wherever it pleases today, even if it takes you to places you may have been deliberately avoiding in recent weeks. As is so often the case, what you fear the most is unlikely to happen.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You may end up spending a large chunk of the day dealing with someone else's problem but don't think of it as time wasted. What you do for them now will be done for you later.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Some things can be done on the spur of the moment and some things can be left until the very last minute but what you do today will require a bit more planning. Others won't do it for you, so get on with it.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You know from experience there is no point shouting or making threats. If you want something done today, you will have to do it yourself or offer something valuable in return. So, do it yourself then.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Listen carefully to what a friend tells you today, even if you have heard it many times before. They may just have the key to a problem that has been annoying you for some time.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
It's not wrong to be suspicious but it is wrong to take it to unreasonable levels. Rest assured that what you hear today is in no way designed to deceive you. SALLY BROMPTON
